

Diagram of Graduate Review Process

Self-study: Compiled by DGP and faculty, to be sent to college deans and the Graduate School, which will send it to reviewers, by 2 weeks before review.

Agenda: Initial draft sent to program by Graduate School about 6 weeks before review; program collaborates with Graduate School in revision.

Program response to review report: Faculty respond to each recommendation—comments, actions taken to implement recommendations, and resources needed.

Meeting with college deans: Program administrators meet with deans to discuss review findings and resources needed to implement high-priority recommendations

Revised program response: Faculty revise response document to reflect any funding decisions of deans; sends document to Graduate School.

Preliminary Action Plan: Created by Graduate School, this plan is based on the program response and focuses mainly on actions to implement recommendations.

Post-Review meeting: Program administrators meet with provost, vice chancellor for research, and deans to discuss review findings and funding

Final Action Plan: Revision of Preliminary Action Plan based on outcomes of post-review meeting and archived in InfoWeb.

Follow-up on Final Action Plan: DGP reports every two years on progress toward implementing recommendations and obstacles to implementation.